"Evanville" Inc., owned by The Evansville Journal, one of Indiana's oldest newspapers, has suspended publication. It was founded in 1833 by William Town as a weekly to support the '76 party. The suspension leaves the Evansville Journal as the only newspaper in the city and the Courier as the only morning paper.

New York, Feb. 19.—Willie Williams, 34, of the New York Athletic Club, tonight resumed his cue tilts against the contract for a June 3 bout between Scheidat and Bradlock. Williams' opponent, Earl's Long Island boat, and the Garden insists he "can't away with it."

While Gould was explaining this the Louis fight offer came from Sheldon Clark, wealthy Chicago sportsman once associated with Tex Tucker in promoting the "Jugate game's" biggest all-time gate—the second Dempsey-Tunney clash—the Garden's promoter, Jimmy Johnston, advised all concerned last night to "pay no attention to Gould's demand," said it was irrelevant, and decided it was a "publicity stunt."

MOUNTAIN WIFE DOES NOT FEAR THE GOSSIPERS

LIVE IN A CABIN

Sneedville, Tenn., Feb. 1.—(UP)—Golden-haired Eunice Winstead Johns, nine-year-old bride, left her doll in its cradle today to learn the duties of a mountain wife.

The third-grade pupil who became the wife of strapping Charlie Johns, 13 years her senior and twice her size, thrust aside the preoccupations of childhood for the realities of adult existence in the Tennessee back country.

While ministers and social workers at Knoxville "down below" began organized protest against the marriage, Eunice was up at daybreak in her mother's three-room cabin high in the picturesque Cumberland to learn how to keep house, the mountain way.

City folks who read about the marriage came here over the weekend to see the couple and told them about all the talk it was causing in Knoxville. But that didn't worry either of them. They had what, according to the mountain code, is the most essential approval—that of the bride's parents.

Each Other

The slender, delicately formed child with blue eyes and golden hair, was wearing a plain gold band around her finger to show she was the wife of the gangling black haired mountaineer.

"I love Charlie and he loves me," she told her mother, Mrs. Lewis Winstead, who herself had become a mountain bride at 16.

Eunice was married to her husky, denim-clad "sweetheart" about two weeks ago by the Rev. Walter Lamb, Baptist minister who preaches in the isolated mountain counties near here. The marriage ceremony, Rev. Lamb said, was performed on a lonely road where they had met him and demanded that he unite them in matrimony.

"They told me," said the minister, "that if I didn't marry them, someone else would. So I performed the ceremony."

Sneedville, mountain town that boasts the only telephone in Hancock county, was divided over the "match."

"What God has joined together, let no man put asunder," some of Eunice's deeply religious neighbors said. Others, who had seen the little girl playing with a doll only last week, were opposed to the marriage.

Doll for Present

Only a few weeks before the marriage, Charlie brought Eunice a Christmas present—a doll almost the size of a real baby, with hair the color of her own. The child-bride sewed the doll a dress and made it a cradle only a few days before she was married.

Oblivious to the veiled antagonism of neighbors in nearby mountain homes, Mrs. Winstead today began training her daughter in the duties of a housewife. Her approval of the union, she said, was based on her liking for her new son-in-law.

"I didn't have any idea they were so interested in each other until Eunice came and told me they had been married," she said. "But now that they are married with Preacher Lamb saying the words, I believe in letting them alone."

"They say they love each other, and Charlie is a fine boy and a good worker."

OUR BOARDING HOUSE

Scribe Finds Old Man River Treacherous But Pushes On

By HENRY MCLEMORE (Copyright, 1937, by United Press)

On the Levee Near Caruthersville, Mo., Feb. 1.—(UP)—Meet Oscar Boone who lives in a house surrounded by water—a two-room house occupied by his wife, three children, and a squealing pig.

Meet him as I did, in darkness with the flood rolling around us, our boat bucking in the current, and rain beating into our faces. He's a man with a heart as big as his hands, and that feeble little light from the window of his house was haven for me and for the pilot of the 210-horsepower cruiser in which I had come up the river and in which we got lost in the inky hours before dawn.

Oscar threw a scolding from his house to our boat and we cat-walked across.

"Good thing you got here when you did," he said. "Because tomorrow she'll be coming through the floor and we'll be moving out."

We went into the main room. The three children were asleep on an iron bed in a corner. Mrs. Boone was in a rocking chair, not seeming to care that eight feet of water rolled through the cellar of the house on old levee.

"You better have a drink," Oscar said, taking a half pint of rye out of his overalls pocket. "It's a bad night."

Oscar, the pilot, and I split the whisky.

Oscar began to tell us about the flood. He had been heaving sandbags into the weak spots of the New Barfield levee. Those sandbags weigh 100 pounds apiece wet. But Oscar was ready to keep going and he even offered to pilot us three miles through darkness across backwater to New Barfield.

"Though you're perfectly welcome to stay here, sir," he added.

We thanked Oscar, got directions from him and pushed on.

Miss Leona Grise of Montreal who had been visiting relatives and friends in Bourbonnais and vicinity, visited the Misses Rose and Olympe Mongeau recently while enroute to Chicago on their return home. They were accompanied by Miss Alice and Paul Benoit who went as far as Chicago with them.

Washington, Feb. 1.—(AP)—Officials of the president's birthday balls hoped today to find a larger profit for aiding infantile paralysis sufferers in Saturday's parties than in those of a year ago.

Speaking to guests at birthday balls throughout the land, President Roosevelt thanked the public for its flood aid, and promised that a "through national effort on a national scale, we shall hope in the days to come to decrease the probability of future floods and similar disasters."
